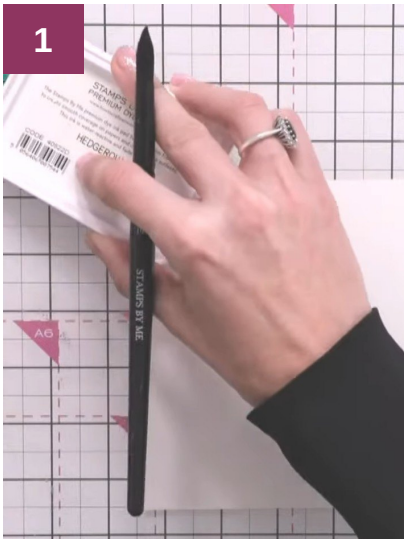
PASSO PASSO



PASSAGGIO 1 DI 8

Wet your paintbrush with water. Pick up green ink (Limeade) from the dye ink pad using the wet brush.

PASSAGGIO 2 DI 8

Hold your brush upright on its toe, then push down onto its belly, then bring back up to the toe in one fluid motion to create a leaf shape. Practice this toe-belly-toe technique to form natural-looking leaves.

PASSAGGIO 3 DI 8

Continue creating toe-belly-toe leaf shapes, building up a cluster of leaves pointing in various directions. Work across the paper to create a natural, organic arrangement of leaves.

PASSAGGIO 4 DI 8

While the first colour is still wet, drop a second colour (such as teal) into the wet ink to create instant dimension. Allow the colours to blend naturally on the surface.

PASSAGGIO 5 DI 8

Create variation by applying the toe-belly-toe motion twice on a single leaf shape using teal ink. This creates a curved, elegant effect with darker tones at each end and a lighter middle section.

PASSAGGIO 6 DI 8

Extend the toe-belly-toe technique into longer branches by stretching the motion along a longer line. Paint elongated leaf shapes using the same pressure variation, creating a mix of darker teal and lighter mint green leaves radiating outward.

PASSAGGIO 7 DI 8

Once the initial layer has dried slightly, go back in with more colour to darken certain areas of the leaves. Use the fine tip paintbrush to add depth and dimension to your leaf cluster.

PASSAGGIO 8 DI 8

Allow the watercolour to dry naturally, leaving any harsh lines and watercolour effects as part of the organic toe-belly-toe technique. The varied tones and natural blending create an authentic watercolour leaf cluster effect.

CONSIGLI DALLA PUNTATA

- The toe-belly-toe motion comes from the brush movement, not your hand movement as a person.
- Watercolour dries back two shades lighter than it appears when wet, so apply colour generously.
- You do not need to be perfect; watercolour has no rules and no two pieces are ever the same.
