

Watercolour Effect Lamination Card

7 MAY 2026

Create a beautiful watercolour effect card featuring a delicate pink dahlia flower with green foliage. Using a two-part lamination stamp system with coloured inks and water spray, you'll achieve an artistic, hand-painted look without needing any painting skills. The technique produces a soft, illustrative finish perfect for elegant greeting cards.

WHAT YOU WILL NEED

See the show for everything used.

STEP 1

Apply ink directly from multiple ink pads onto white or watercolour cardstock. Use different colours in the areas where you want colour to appear. Rattle or tap the ink pad on the card surface to deposit the ink.

STEP 2

Lightly spray the inked card with water to allow the colours to blend and spread naturally. Don't worry about being precise - the water will create organic blending effects.

Watch this step: 42:00 into the show

STEP 3

Stamp the solid portion of the lamination stamp onto the wet, coloured card.

Press firmly to transfer the image, creating the base layer of your flower design.

Watch this step: 42:30 into the show

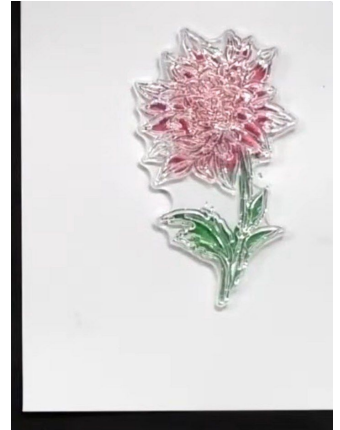

STEP 4

Allow the stamped and coloured flower card to dry completely before proceeding. The watercolour effect should look like a pencil sketch with the pink flower head and green stem fully dried.

Watch this step: 43:00 into the show

STEP 5

Stamp the detail portion of your image using black or grey ink to add fine definition to the flower. This creates crisp outlines and detail over the watercoloured background.

Watch this step: 43:30 into the show

STEP 6

For extra watercolour bleed effects, spray additional water on top of the stamped flower. This will create more colour diffusion and a softer watercolour appearance.

Watch this step: 44:00 into the show

TIPS FROM THE SHOW

- Use watercolour card stock for the best bleed and movement of inks, though standard card will work
- If using a chalky card stock, the ink will not bleed as well, so choose a lower-chalk-content paper
- You can stamp the detail portion in grey ink instead of black to create a pencil sketch appearance
